FOREIGN.—The septennate bill had a second reading in the German Reichstag. De Lesseps has arrived at Berlin. The prospects of a Liberal Union in England are not bright. The United States has been the target of American naval attacks in London, since that draughtman Henry was bribed. Silver in London, 46 1/2.

An oil warehouse was burned in San Francisco yesterday. The trial of the San Francisco dynamiters has been postponed. Fire at Santa Rosa, Cal., $10,000. The case of Eugene Redden, on trial at Petaluma for abduction, has been dismissed. Turner, editor of the Jacksville Or., Sentinel, is dead.

SUGGESTIVE ASSOCIATION.

Our esteemed contemporary, the San Francisco Chronicle, is nothing if not enterprising. We entertain an undisguised admiration for enterprises in general, and for journalistic enterprise in particular. Our esteemed contemporary, the Chronicle, is also sensational as well as enterprising. It is perhaps never so well satisfied with itself as when its columns are reeking with gore, and its horrid head lines find ample justification in the harrowing details set forth in the text matter. It is in pursuit of subscribers and sensational news, and in this laudable double pursuit it advertises the weekly Chronicle and a first-class trustworthy revolver for a single price. In this way it not only obtains a subscriber for its paper, but furnishes the subscriber with the means of producing sensational news. It claims a circulation of anywhere from 25 to 50,000. Now, if each of these subscribers is armed with a 38-caliber-nickel-plated-weekly-Chronicle revolver, it will not be the fault of the Chronicle if they do not, in the course of a year, shoot a neighbor, and thus make from 25 to 50,000 excellent items for publication. There is a peculiar fitness of things in this premium offer of the Chronicle. It reminds us strongly of the express agent who, upon delivering an uncut stone at a way station, rolled a barrel of whisky to the door of the express car, and said to the local agent, "Here is a barrel of whisky without any address on it. I think it goes with that tonstone." In its advertisement the Chronicle says: "Every farmer, miner and merchant should have one of the Chronicle's American double-action pistols." Since there is a State statute which makes it a misdemeanor to carry pistols, the Chronicle's statement that every farmer, miner and merchant ought to have one of its nickel-plated shooting-irons is as cool as it is unique. We can readily understand the relation between the production of sensational news and the universal possession of revolvers. We can readily see, even with our limited experience of journalism, how much the possession of a nickel-plated revolver on the part of every farmer, miner or merchant will increase the crop of shooting incidents, assassinations and other playful amusements to which the farmer, miner and merchant is invited by this advertisement. We read with undisguised admiration for the genius which not only takes particular care to collect all the news, but also to make it, in the statement of the Chronicle's ad, "well send this beautiful weapon and prey the express charges." There is something extremely persuasive in this statement, and hereafter let no man say that the means of violence the State statute against carrying revolvers, or of committing assassination, or of shooting one's neighbor in a brawl, is not within the reach of the poorest condition. The price at which the Weekly Chronicle and this 38-caliber revolver are jointly offered proves that either the shooter or the paper is not worth to exceed two bits a dozen, while the perfect fitness of the association, the harmonious blending of spirit between the premium and the character of the paper offered, will not escape the attention of any careful student of the Chronicle.

GOOD AND PROMPT ACTION.

The Assembly acted with commendable vigor and spirit when it rejected the Senate amendment to the county government bill concerning liquor licenses. The bill provides that the Supervisors shall fix license rates for all business to be licensed. Why in the name of reason should liquor act upon the power to tax? It will limit put upon the power to tax? It will perfectly ruin the city, as it will to all other business. But run is an outlaw—always has been, it always will be. It stands with its hands up against society. It asks exemptions and privileges granted to no other class of business. It is in keeping, therefore, with all its traditions that it should come to the Legislature and ask to be protected against the possibility of society imposing upon it a tax in excess of $25 per quarter. The amendment of the Senate, which was but one of several efforts and schemes of like character, fixed that sum as the maximum beyond which counties should not go in taxing liquor selling for its license premium. The Assembly refused to be a party to such discrimination in favor of one business and against all others and it acted wisely. Let the liquor business take its place and risks with all others before the people. What special virtue invests it, that it should ask to be protected from the legislation of the social organization from which it derives its revenue? Why do not the promoters of the hotel business, of hardware retailing, of tobacco selling, of dry goods retailing, of theater running, and so on, demand that a limit be put upon them? How is it that they should be left to the mercy of local government, while liquor selling is hedged about with legislative redoubts and beset works? Let the Assembly have done praise for its action. Its courage in this instance wipes out a multitude of its sins of omission, and condones many of its sins of commission. It is notable that most members of the San Francisco delegation voted to curb society in the interest of the saloon. This was to have been expected, that delegation knows to whom it owes allegiance first, and it does obedience where it is due. In the face of the great gratification now stirring New York to its center, in favor of such restriction that there shall not be more than a dozen saloons per head to the population, this effort to foster a business that always has been to take care of itself and run a large section of political machinery begets, savors of the impudent. In the face of the flat indorsement of high license by that most powerful of all commercial bodies, and in which the chief wholesale liquor dealers of the nation's metropolis have seats, this effort to legislate in advance against possible high license in California, was a confession of fear that it was the part of shortsightedness to make. No one is clamoring now for high license in this State, but the action that proposed to forestall it, will tend to precipitate such agitation. The wiser and cooler-headed men in the liquor business deplored the effort referred to, and are not to be classed with the foolish few who drove the Assembly to a corner. The former are content to stand upon the same plane with other businesses; the latter thought to gain a temporary exemption from the common lot of taxpayers. The Assembly has by a decisive vote rebuked them and done itself everlasting honor.

Favoritism.

Is a bad thing, but Dr. Pierce's "Favorite Prescription" deserves its name. It is a certain cure for those painful malady and weakness which embitter the lives of so many women. Of druggists.

Human nature or human frailty cannot subside without some lawful recreation.

AMERICAN double action pattern; and if the double action construction had only done its duty, how much trouble and expense would have been saved to the Courts of San Francisco. We can readily imagine the editorial comments of the Chronicle. We reproduce one which, while we are willing to admit is purely fanciful, we are not willing to admit is not entirely consistent with reasonable probability. The Chronicle could have said:

"We call attention to the brutal murder of the little school-girl, Mamie Kelly, by a lecherous fiend named Goldenson. The weapon used on this occasion was one of the Chronicle's American double-action revolvers, and while the fate of the innocent school-girl may sadden the hearts of mothers, the friends of public justice will be pleased to know that by the ingenious double action of this trustworthy weapon her slayer meted out to him, thus saving the expense of Court proceedings. The gain to the municipal treasury by the use of these weapons in all cases of assassination is such as to justify the Chief of Police in requiring that all assassins shall hereafter use none other than the Chronicle's great American double-action killer. We also call the attention of all intending murderers to the effectiveness of this weapon, as fully set forth in our news columns. The little victim never spoke after she was shot. We take this occasion to announce that the Chronicle intends to offer the most complete set of burglar's tools to be found in the market, as a premium at a single price to each subscriber for the day."

If, by any possibility, we were to be mistaken as to the object our esteemed contemporary had in view in bringing within the reach of all the means of assassination, the only other possible theory relates to the misapprehension that may have grown up in the Chronicle office as to the necessity of providing its readers with the means of self-defense. This offer of an American, double-action, trustworthy weapon as a premium to subscribers of that paper may indicate that the apprehensions of the editorial room have extended to the circulation department, and the astute manager of that department may have concluded that it is quite as essential that the readers of a paper like the Chronicle should be judiciously provided with the means of defense against avenging wrath as the editors of a paper of that character. In all respects, the revolver has played an important and stirring part in the history of our contemporary, and the offer of nickel-plated death as a premium to its subscribers is so completely harmonious with the eternal fitness of things, that we give it the benefit of this advertisement, and shall make no charge.

The agency of journalism in the civilization of the world has never found more complete justification than in this incident. A revolver and a newspaper for one price! At last the newspaper arises to the civilized plane of the revolver! At last—O, happy age—the implements of moral and physical death are furnished, express prepaid, to a single address, in a single package, at a single price!
